Highlights of Yamashiro, the Home of AIUEO

Gorinto pagoda, the grave of Myogaku
 A quiet path surrounded by trees and plants, the AIUEO path is loved by locals and tourists. Visit the sacred forest where Myogaku's body rests and explore the history of the Japanese syllabary chart.

The AIUEO Path
 Located near Soyu and Kosoyu in the center of the hot springs resort, this old temple dedicated to Hakusan, the sacred mountain, was considered the leading one of the main five Hakusan temples of the time. This is a power spot where the souls of many Shinto gods and Buddhist deities reside.

Yakuoin Onsen Temple
 Located at the top of Banshoen, Sazaedo, a 12.3-meter-high observatory, overlooks the townscape of Yamashiro. If it's sunny, you can see Mt. Hakusan.

Banshoen Garden
 Located near Soyu and Kosoyu in the center of the hot springs resort, this old temple dedicated to Hakusan, the sacred mountain, was considered the leading one of the main five Hakusan temples of the time. This is a power spot where the souls of many Shinto gods and Buddhist deities reside.

Han-on Saho Monument
 Han-on Saho is one of the many works Myogaku wrote at the Onsen Temple. A monument has been newly built to commemorate this work in which he described the prevalent system of ordering the Japanese syllabary. The original work belongs to the collection of Dai-tokyo Memorial Library of the Gotou Museum in Tokyo.

Yamashiro Onsen is the birthplace of the "Japanese syllabary table (あいうえお・ん=A, I, U, E, O...N)".
 A leading Japanese scholar in the study of ancient Indian languages, Myogaku Shonin moved from Enryaku Temple at Mt. Hiei to Yakuoin Onsen Temple here in Yamashiro and developed the prevalent system of ordering the Japanese syllabary. The oldest remaining Japanese syllabary chart can be seen in Han-on Saho written by Myogaku in 1093.

Called the AIUEO path, the stone stairway on the temple grounds leads to Banshoen garden at the mountain behind the temple. The steps feature Kutani tiles, each showing a Japanese syllable. When you reach the top of the stairway, you will see Myogaku's grave (gorinto pagoda) in the middle of Banshoen, a green, rich garden with giant evergreen trees everywhere. The pagoda is a national Important Cultural Property.

Located near Soyu and Kosoyu in the center of the hot springs resort, this old temple dedicated to Hakusan, the sacred mountain, was considered the leading one of the main five Hakusan temples of the time. This is a power spot where the souls of many Shinto gods and Buddhist deities reside.
